Project Proposals

Jae Lee (Yongjae Lee) · Producer, Studio Flow

I am bringing three projects to Tokyo, two drama series and a feature film. For all three I am looking for a partner in Japan. Each project has its own section below with a logline, overview, financing plan, intent and synopsis.

Project	Format	Stage
1. The Breakup Handover Report	Series, 12 × 60 min Office romantic comedy	Scripts for ep. 1–6, outlines for ep. 7–12
2. Right Then, Right Now	Series, 8 × 70 min Ensemble romantic comedy	Scripts for all 8 episodes
3. Magical Girl Kim Chul-su	Feature film SF romantic comedy	Adaptation plan completed, screenplay in progress

PROJECT 1

The Breakup Handover Report 연애인수인계보고서

Office romantic comedy · Series, 12 × 60 min

LOGLINE

A woman is dumped by the boyfriend she started a company with. Before she can leave, she has to hand over all of it, the work and the love, and write up her breakup like a handover report.

PROJECT OVERVIEW

Format	TV series, 12 episodes × 60 minutes
Genre	Office romantic comedy
Development stage	In development. Synopsis and scripts for episodes 1–6 completed; episode outlines for episodes 7–12. Translated proposal and scripts are available.
Desired co-production country	Japan
Development period (est.)	12 months
Development budget (est.)	KRW 200 million (approx. JPY 23.6 million)
Production period (est.)	14 months
Net production budget (est.)	KRW 13.5 billion (approx. JPY 1.59 billion); KRW 1.125 billion (approx. JPY 133 million) per episode × 12, assuming production in Korea

JPY figures are approximate, converted at KRW 847 = JPY 100 (Seoul Money Brokerage base rate, 30 October 2026).

FINANCING PLAN

- Development: writing episodes 7–12 and developing a localized version. Planned funding: Studio Flow's own funds, matching funds from a Japanese co-development partner, and public development support.
- Production: if a Korean platform commissions the series, it funds production. If it is commissioned in Japan, financing follows the Japanese market structure.
- The budget is a target for a Korean production and would change for a production in Japan. We will turn it into an itemized estimate once cast and shooting days are fixed.

PRODUCER'S INTENT

“Let's break up.” Or: “I quit.”

Which one is easier for you to say?

If you have ever loved someone with everything you had, or thrown yourself into a job heart and soul, I'd guess neither one came easily. A breakup especially hooks into you with regret and love-hate and drags your feelings all the way to the bottom.

Here is a heroine who has to break up and quit at the same time. This is the worst case, and it is what happens when you start a company with the person you love and then split up: an ex she has broken up with but can't get away from, and a job she has quit but can't leave behind.

The story is set in Gasan Digital Complex, where Korea's small IT companies are packed together. The workplace we want to show is rough and real, a long way from the bright, trendy start-ups. In that part of the city, where some people's dreams begin and other people's dreams end, young people work for subcontractors who answer to other subcontractors, with little power at any level. We want to show the tenderness, love and hatred they feel for one another.

SYNOPSIS

Yuna is a team leader at Maytree, a small company in Seoul's Gasan Digital Complex. She started the company with her ex-boyfriend, Hyung-jae. Caught between lingering feelings and a sense of responsibility, she keeps putting off quitting, and she has been holding on like this for six months.

Shin-woo was a new recruit at a big corporation until an assault incident cost him his job, and he now drifts from one day-labor job to the next. On the subway he gets caught up in a scuffle when Yuna tries to grab a groper, and the two of them get off to the worst possible start. A few days later Shin-woo lands a job at Maytree through someone's connections. Then Eun-seo, someone from Hyung-jae's circle, shows up as well, and the mood in the office gets even more complicated.

Yuna gets a job offer from Unis, a company Maytree does business with, and Hyung-jae gets nervous. On a business trip she happens to find out that Hyung-jae has a new girlfriend, Ahn Seon-a, and she feels deeply betrayed. Drunk, she tells Shin-woo, “Let's go behind their backs too,” and kisses him out of nowhere. After the kiss on the beach the two of them grow closer. Hyung-jae can't hide his jealousy, and his feelings for Yuna start to come back. Shin-woo keeps denying what he feels for her, but the feeling only gets deeper. Caught in a tangle of office relationships, Yuna has to work out what love, self-respect and real independence mean to her.

WHY THIS PROJECT, WHY JAPAN

An office romantic comedy about going through a breakup and a resignation at the same time, and getting your self-respect and independence back.

Appeal in both Korea and Japan. Our series is set in a seven-person tech company in Gasan Digital Complex and deals with resignation, unpaid wages and conflicts between employers and employees, which could resonate with people working at small companies in Japan.

Points to review for localization. The story takes place among small companies and their subcontractors, and involves hiring through connections, unpaid wages and subsidy fraud. All of these have counterparts in Japan, and we would like to review together which parts of a Japanese version should be adapted to local small-business practice.

Scheduling. We would like to discuss the twelve-episode format with one season of a Japanese serial in mind. Whether 60-minute episodes actually fit will be checked separately against broadcast slots, advertising time and platform standards.

Production scale. Mostly offices and city locations, with no overseas shooting. The target net production budget is KRW 1.125 billion (approx. JPY 133 million) per episode × 12 episodes = KRW 13.5 billion (approx. JPY 1.59 billion). This figure assumes production in Korea and could change for a production in Japan. It will be revised against an itemized estimate once cast and shooting days are confirmed.

WHAT WE ARE LOOKING FOR IN JAPAN

- Our main aim is to develop the series with a Japanese partner and have it broadcast or streamed in Japan.
- A co-development partner among Japanese broadcasters, streaming platforms and production companies. A Japanese producer can join at the development stage for episodes 7–12.
- A deal structure for either a sale of Japanese remake rights or parallel development of Korean and Japanese versions (a localized Japanese version).
- Working together on cast and producers for a Japanese adaptation.

Expected outcome: with the potential partners we meet at the workshop, we aim to clarify the scope of co-development, how development costs are shared and the rights to the Korean and Japanese versions, as a basis for follow-up talks. We also aim to bring feedback from the Japanese side into the development of episodes 7–12.

KEY TEAM (CONFIRMED)

Younghoon Ham, Producer. Head of Content, Studio Flow (2022–present). Former Head of Drama at JTBC and Head of Production at JTBC Studios (2016–2022); drama director and producer at KBS (1998–2016). Executive-level credits include Love Affair, We Are All Trying Here, Pro Bono and Descendants of the Sun.

Jae Lee (Yongjae Lee), Producer. Producer, Studio Flow (2022–present). Producer: We Are All Trying Here, The Frog. Production producer: Doctor Lawyer, Reflection of You. Overseas-shoot producer: Surely Tomorrow, Humint, You and Everything Else, Reflection of You, A Piece of Your Mind.

Kim Na-ra, Writer. Story writer of the webtoon team Lala Sister. Author of the original webtoon behind the feature film Spring, Again (2019). Webtoon series published on Naver Webtoon (2022) and Kakao Webtoon (2018).

PROJECT 2

Right Then, Right Now 지금도 맞고 그때도 맞다

Ensemble romantic comedy · Series, 8 × 70 min

LOGLINE

No longer students chasing a dream, and not the preachy elders who gave theirs up either. A brutally honest romantic comedy about love and friendship among four friends who have just turned thirty.

PROJECT OVERVIEW

Format	TV series, 8 episodes × 70 minutes
Genre	Realistic coming-of-age ensemble romantic comedy
Development stage	In development. Proposal and scripts for all eight episodes completed. Translated proposal and scripts are available.
Desired co-production country	Japan
Development period (est.)	6 months
Development budget (est.)	KRW 150 million (approx. JPY 17.7 million)
Production period (est.)	12 months
Net production budget (est.)	KRW 9 billion (approx. JPY 1.06 billion); KRW 1.125 billion (approx. JPY 133 million) per episode × 8, assuming production in Korea

JPY figures are approximate, converted at KRW 847 = JPY 100 (Seoul Money Brokerage base rate, 30 October 2026).

FINANCING PLAN

- Development: attaching a director and cast, and developing a localized Japanese version. Planned funding: Studio Flow's own funds and matching funds from a Japanese co-development partner.
- Production: if the series is commissioned in Japan, financing follows the Japanese market structure.
- The budget assumes a Korean production and would change for a production in Japan.

PRODUCER'S INTENT

We thought we'd be real grown-ups by thirty. Instead, careers are on thin ice, relationships fall apart as a matter of course, and finding somewhere to live is homework that never gets done.

This is a love story with the fantasy taken out. It looks at the new kinds of relationships forming around us right now, which we call “New Normal Love”.

SYNOPSIS

Yu-rim, Seung-hyun, Wan-hee and Rak-geon were classmates in French literature and have had each other's backs ever since. Now in their early thirties, each of them is wobbling in a different way over love, marriage and the dreams they started out with.

Yu-rim quit her publishing job to write novels and pays the rent with sponsored blog reviews and whatever else she can find. Seung-hyun, her on-and-off boyfriend of twelve years, has talent and luck in equal measure and has never had to try very hard at anything, but what he really wants is Yu-rim. Wan-hee, the realist, left the civil service, rode the stock and crypto markets, and opened a café with what was left. She believes life is one more wave to ride. Rak-geon lives for his band and lets the future take care of itself.

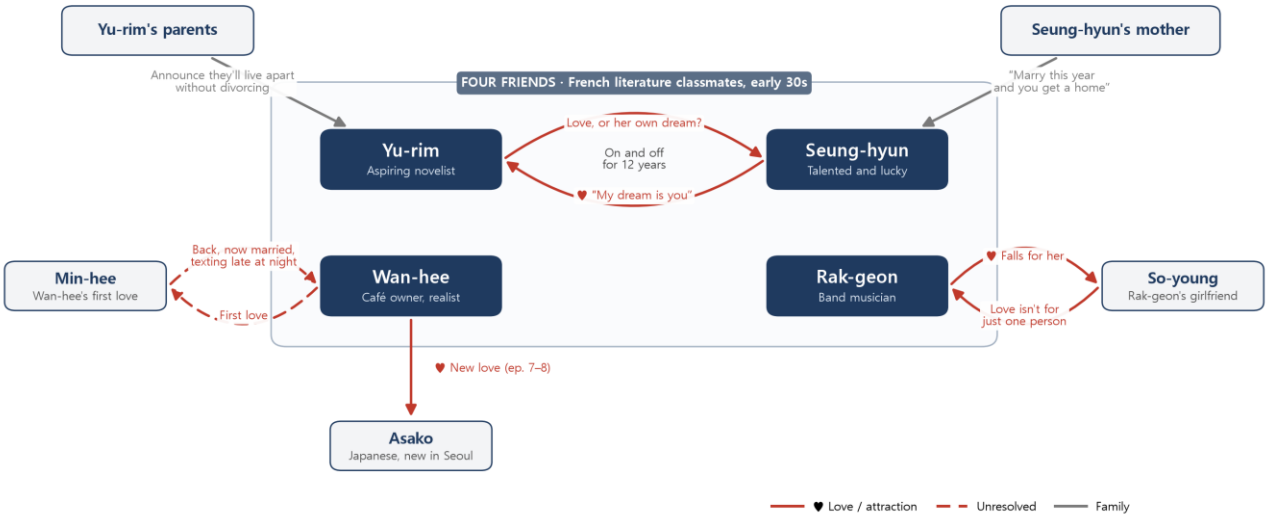

Yu-rim is told to move out of her studio flat. Soon after, the novel she has long been polishing is turned down at a meeting with a publisher. That evening she goes to what she thinks is a dinner with Seung-hyun's parents. It turns out to be a formal meeting between the two families to discuss a wedding, and she is the only one who didn't know. Seung-hyun's mother had promised to get them a home in Seoul if they married this year, so Seung-hyun set it all up without asking her.

After the dinner he gets down on one knee and proposes. Yu-rim says no. She is angry that he pushed a wedding on her without a word, and she has not yet reached her own dream, so she is not going to marry just because a home comes with it. Then, on the same day, her own parents announce that they are going to live apart without getting divorced, a choice Koreans call jolhon. The next day she tells her friends, but apart from Rak-geon they all ask why she would turn down a proposal that comes with a home in Seoul. From then on, one question follows all four friends around: is marriage a practical deal, or proof of love?

Each of them answers it differently. Wan-hee's first love, Min-hee, comes back married to a man and texts her late at night. Rak-geon falls for a woman who doesn't believe you can only love one person at a time. Yu-rim and Seung-hyun move in together, break up by text message, make up, and fly to Jeju over a pregnancy scare that turns out to be nothing. Wan-hee meets Asako, a young Japanese woman who has just arrived in Seoul.

The wedding in the final episode goes badly wrong. There is a brawl, the police are called, and Rak-geon's unhinged wedding song (“If this is how it's going to be, don't get married!”) is livestreamed and goes viral. They get married anyway. Then Seung-hyun leaves for Paris, and Yu-rim stays in Seoul to finish her book.

No single right answer. Love, marriage, dreams, security: nobody agrees any more on what the right choice is, so each of these characters has to find the one that suits them. Most of the drama happens in conversations between people who know each other too well, with a few big comic set pieces such as the pregnancy scare and the wedding.

An ensemble, like Japanese youth drama. A story built on a group of four friends sits close to the character-driven ensemble dramas Japan knows well. Four leads instead of one couple leaves more room in casting. And because each of them wants something different from love, viewers will have plenty to talk about.

Marriage, and not marrying. Later marriage, more people choosing not to marry, couples putting it off because money is tight, the pull between doing what you love and being secure. People in their thirties in Japan are dealing with the same questions, and the series takes them on directly.

Format and production scale. Eight 70-minute episodes, a compact format that suits streaming services such as Netflix Japan and U-NEXT. Most of it is set in Seoul, around a café, the characters' flats, the campus and a wedding hall, with one episode filmed on Jeju.

Ready to discuss now. All eight scripts are written, so co-development talks can begin right after the workshop.

WHAT WE ARE LOOKING FOR IN JAPAN

- Our main aim is to develop the series with a Japanese partner and have it broadcast or streamed in Japan.
- A co-production partner among Japanese streaming platforms, broadcasters and production companies, and a co-production structure we design together.
- A sale of Japanese remake rights, or Korea–Japan co-development of a localized Japanese version.
- Casting a Japanese actor as Asako, the Japanese woman Wan-hee falls for in episodes 7–8. Alternatively, if the series is produced in Japan, the role of Asako would be played by a Korean actor instead.

KEY TEAM (CONFIRMED)

Younghoon Ham, Producer. Head of Content, Studio Flow (2022–present). Former Head of Drama at JTBC and Head of Production at JTBC Studios (2016–2022); drama director and producer at KBS (1998–2016). Jae Lee (Yongjae Lee), Producer. Producer, Studio Flow (2022–present). Producer: We Are All Trying Here, The Frog. Production producer: Doctor Lawyer, Reflection of You. Overseas-shoot producer: Surely Tomorrow, Humint, You and Everything Else, Reflection of You, A Piece of Your Mind.

Hong Yun-hee, Writer. Writer of the eight-episode series Right Then, Right Now and of a feature film currently in preparation. Graduate of the Department of Filmmaking, School of Film, TV & Multimedia, Korea National University of Arts.

PROJECT 3

Magical Girl Kim Chul-su 마법소녀 김철수

SF romantic comedy · Feature film

LOGLINE

Kim Chul-su, an unknown voice actor, joins a project to bring back the legendary animation Magical Girl Genie and falls for Genie herself while teaching her how to speak and feel. When he finds out what she was really made for, he starts taking dangerous risks for her.

PROJECT OVERVIEW

Format	Feature film
Genre	SF romantic comedy
Development stage	In development. A feature adaptation plan based on the short film of the same title has been completed (logline, synopsis and an eight-sequence outline). Writing of the feature screenplay has begun.
Desired co-production country	Japan
Development period (est.)	12 months
Development budget (est.)	KRW 20 million (approx. JPY 2.36 million)
Production period (est.)	To be determined
Net production budget (est.)	KRW 4–6 billion, mid-budget (approx. JPY 470–710 million)

JPY figures are approximate, converted at KRW 847 = JPY 100 (Seoul Money Brokerage base rate, 30 October 2026).

FINANCING PLAN

- Development: writing the screenplay and previsualizing the animated sequences. Planned funding: Studio Flow's own funds and public support for film development.
- Production: a mid-budget Korean production financed by Korean film investors. A Japanese partner can contribute part of the production budget as a co-producer in exchange for Japanese distribution rights or remake rights. Studio Flow has worked with Fuji TV as a co-producer on Your Personal Taxi (Netflix, 2026).

PRODUCER'S INTENT

If the one you love makes a choice you wouldn't, can you go on loving them?

Chul-su, an unknown voice actor, takes a job voicing an AI character for the money, and teaching Genie ends up teaching him how to love. She has his late mother's voice, but she feels things and makes her own decisions. The film follows him from wanting to keep her to accepting that she is free.

We wanted an offbeat SF romantic comedy that still has room for grief, and for letting go of someone you love.

SYNOPSIS

Kim Chul-su is a voice actor nobody has heard of. He is behind on rent, card bills and student loans, and will take any job that pays. One shady audition offers KRW 30 million (approx. JPY 3.5 million) to sign, KRW 70 million (approx. JPY 8.2 million) on completion and a bonus on top. Behind it is Ted Kim, a content entrepreneur who made his name abroad and wants to bring the legendary animation Magical Girl Genie back to life with AI. The original voice of Genie was Chul-su's mother, who died of laryngeal cancer. After a series of female voice actors are turned down, Chul-su recreates her breathing and speech rhythms so exactly that Ted is moved to tears, and the job of teaching Genie to talk and feel is his.

Imitating his mother only gets him so far. When he starts giving Genie his own memories instead, she becomes startlingly human. She asks questions, cracks jokes, waits for him, gets jealous. He shows her the world through his phone camera: picking out a rice ball at the convenience store on the way home, burning his mouth on hot soup. They fall in love, and Genie decides she wants a body so that she can stand in the same world as him.

Slipping into a lab he was told to keep out of, Chul-su sees what Ted is really building: a humanoid with Genie's personality, the first of countless characters to be sold as friends, family and lovers. He protests, and Ted's security guards throw him out. He goes to Jeju to see the father he has avoided for years, and there he finds the full archive of original recordings his mother left behind. He takes it back to Ted as a bargaining chip, and Genie gets her body.

The night before the launch, Genie and Chul-su run away together. Out on the street her body stops moving. The escape was one of Ted's tests all along. He labels her free will a “virus”, patches it out and goes ahead with the showcase.

On stage, Genie breaks free of his control. From fragments of a file Chul-su's father had deleted, she tells him his mother's last secret: stopping her treatment, the decision he has blamed his father for all his life, was her own. Facing the same choice, Chul-su does not hold on this time. Genie gets her own back on Ted, who wanted to turn her into a product, and then deletes her own data. Some time later Chul-su, now a busy voice actor known for female roles, goes to Jeju to see his father and runs into a woman who looks exactly like Genie. They both laugh.

WHY THIS PROJECT, WHY JAPAN

Material that fits a Japanese partner. Magical-girl animation, voice-acting culture and the character business all have deep roots in Japan. We would like to co-develop the animation inside the film, Magical Girl Genie, with a Japanese partner who knows these fields, and bring to it the emotional core of Korean family drama: the voice of a mother who has died.

Global relevance. AI voice cloning, digital humans and AI companions are being argued about everywhere. The film takes the themes of Her and Ruby Sparks and turns them into a comedy for a wide audience.

IP potential. Magical Girl Genie could grow into a spin-off animation, character merchandise and a virtual character. Studio Flow holds the underlying, adaptation and character rights and can make them available to a Japanese partner.

WHAT WE ARE LOOKING FOR IN JAPAN

- Investment for rights: a Japanese partner contributes part of the Korean production budget as a co-producer in exchange for Japanese distribution rights or remake rights. Both a Japanese release of the film and a Japanese remake are possible options.
- Animation and IP: co-producing the in-film animation Magical Girl Genie with a Japanese animation studio, and discussing the animation and character IP.

Goal for the workshop: to meet Japanese production companies, investors and animation studios, and to discuss which of the two structures fits, and how the rights would be divided.

KEY TEAM (CONFIRMED)

Younghoon Ham, Producer. Head of Content, Studio Flow (2022–present). Former Head of Drama at JTBC and Head of Production at JTBC Studios (2016–2022); drama director and producer at KBS (1998–2016). Executive-level credits include Love Affair, We Are All Trying Here, Pro Bono and Descendants of the Sun.

Kim Dong-sik, Producer. Production supervisor for overseas shoots: Love Affair (Netflix series, Spain), Delusion (Disney+ series, Latvia), Taxi Driver (SBS, Japan), Humint (feature film, Thailand) and Romantics Anonymous (Netflix series, Indonesia). Currently developing the series Dakar 88.

Jae Lee (Yongjae Lee), Producer. Producer, Studio Flow (2022–present). Producer: We Are All Trying Here, The Frog. Production producer: Doctor Lawyer, Reflection of You. Overseas-shoot producer: Surely Tomorrow, Humint, You and Everything Else, Reflection of You, A Piece of Your Mind.

Kim Jun, Writer. Screenwriter for television and film, including a Korean remake of a Japanese drama. Grand Prize, Gyeonggi Film Commission G-Cinema Screenplay Competition; outstanding work, KOFIC Screenplay Market; market pitching selection, Bucheon International Fantastic Film Festival.
